Rep. Ralph Anderson and Sylvia Risher in the House chamber

Godmother of the S.C. House

By Doug Williams

Rob Wood is now with the Associated Press in Houston.

A little more than a year ago, while working out of the AP's Columbia office, he wrote an article quoting unnamed legislators as saying that Sylvia Orange (now Sylvia Risher, after her July marriage) was overstepping her authority as clerk of the South Carolina House of Representatives.

"She is power hungry," One of the lawmakers said. "She wants to run the House of Representatives, and probably the entire General Assembly."

House Speaker Rex Carter called the report totally erroneous, adding that "I have never known her to even attempt to get involved in the pros or cons of legislation." The House clerk responded to the accusations personally by saying that she had no lust for power.

Shortly after the story appeared, Rob Wood was transferred to Texas. The Associated Press office in Columbia will not comment on the shift; it's against company policy. It was said at the time, however, that Wood wanted to go back to Texas, back home.

Perhaps it is purely coincidental that Wood's desire to go home was granted within weeks of that article critical of Sylvia Risher. Maybe it was also pure coincidence that, after the obligatory followup stories, next to nothing has been written about any extra-administrative activities in which Sylvia Risher may have been involved. But some of the people down at the State House -- legislators and staff members -- think that it was a little more.

Sylvia Risher doesn't think she has any power; certainly not enough to have a wire service reporter transferred. Yet the theory has been set forth that when people think you have power, then you do have power. And a lot of people think Sylvia Risher has a lot of power.

Don't expect her to allow that she has it, though. Ask her, and she'll point to pages 188-189 of The Book (the legislative manual), which she thumps with the fervor of a Baptist minister thumping the Bible. And then, as she tends to do on matters of some controversy, she will answer the question with a question: "Where is the power coming from and in what way? In what way do I have power?"

Tell her that her critics say it comes from within, and the response is somewhat similar: "But how do I exert this? I am charged with the budget; I'm charged with the bookkeeping; I pay them (representatives). But as far as any charge of power, I can't see it because I'm not actually involved in politics."

But Sylvia Risher is very much a politician. She is elected by the 124 members of the House, and despite her description of herself as being apolitical, she plays the games. ("If a new member walked in that door right now, she says, pointing to her bedroom door -- she was interviewed at her home in Bamberg since she has been recovering from surgery -- "I would ask him for his commitment. That's the nature of the game.")

Of course, she has leanings, and she freely concedes as much. "I think anyone in my position certainly has leanings," she says. "I've seen the time, on some issues, where I've felt one way or the other. But it would be an injustice not only to me but to the membership, I think, if I ever voiced an opinion, which I have not. I just don't see the need to; I don't think it's proper."

Sylvia Risher talks in inconsistencies; either that or she lives in a personal delusion masterfully designed to filter out the bad. She hedges on questions of importance and generally denies anything that might be even the least bit unfavorable. She talks slowly, deliberately, refusing to be directed by impulse and seemingly daring the questioner to challenge what she says. She's smart, not easy to trap and has a good memory.

Beyond that, her comments are tinted with self praise and laudatory remarks for the General Assembly. Criticism of the legislature bothers her, she says, probably more than anything else. "It's a fine group of people," she says, "and I think they are often criticized unjustly, and I get a little upset at that. I know the pressure they are under. The tension is there; the pressure is there. And pressure is on each member that's elected. I don't think the public recognized the responsibility that they place on these people."

In short, Risher is a walking, talking, one-person public-relations firm for the General Assembly -- and for Sylvia Risher.

This is not to say, however, that she has not made valuable contributions to state government. Ask most anyone in the capitol and they'll credit Risher with streamlining the muddled system of administrative procedures in which the bureaucracy has wallowed for years.

THE Political economy by Ed Meadows

Home of the mediocre

From ages immemorial, demagogues and editorial writers have condemned the vices of the city with thumping damnation and Christian Indignation. Cities, they foamed, exist only to tempt rustics out of the fields and into the most heinous debaucheries of Sodoms and Gomorrahs. But a small minority knows that cities form and foment a nation's culture. It is, after all, in the large cities where the arts and sciences thrive, where they bump against one another to make bright sparks and create new ideas that fascinate men's minds. The broad reaches of vapid suburbia, as well as the lonely expanses of countryside, are as alien to intellectual ferment as granite is alien to ferment of the alcoholic variety.

Ponder, then, a region that is void of big cities. South Carolina is the example I have in mind. Georgia has its Atlanta and North Carolina has its Charlotte, Florida its Miami, Louisiana its New Orleans, Alabama its Birmingham even, but South Carolina has no metropolis worthy of the name. Hence South Carolina is also devoid of any great university or great newspaper or distinguished symphony. The state is empty of any reputable cultural minority, and it is empty of the vitality that is organic to any urban culture.

Columbia, the state's capital, is surely a threadbare mecca. Its population could reach half a million in not so many years, but still it remains a mediocre small town, overgrown at the seams. It's a dowdy spinster, devoid of any charm and old at heart. Its businessmen are backward, timid men whose motto has always been "can't do." Whenever capital is needed for some new and innovating venture, it must come from the North, or from a foreign nation. The bankers and merchants of Columbia tremble in their boots at the idea of risk. And were it not for Northern banks, along with foreign firms, South Carolina's development would not have progressed one iota from the sorry state it's been in since Reconstruction.

Columbia's mouthpieces, its televison stations and newspapers, are a gross embarrassment to any civilized adult. The televison stations work 24 hours a day to insure that only the most puerile programming is filtered through to Columbians. And if the major station, WIS, at least makes a pretention to competence, the others don't even bother. Consider the degradation of WNOK-TV, the CBS affiliate. Now when CBS News wants local coverage of a news story but doesn't feel the story is important enough to send one of its own correspondents, it asks the local CBS outlet to file a story. But not in Columbia. If CBS wants a Columbia story, it either must send a correspondent or ask WIS (the NBC affiliate!) to supply it. Any self-respecting CBS affiliate would be humiliated by such treatment, but not WNOK-TV. It only gets worse, and keeps raking in the profits. Then if we come to WOLO, the ABC affiliate, well, degradation is too polite a word. ABC knows that if it wants a story datelined Columbia, it must either send a correspondent or forget it. WOLO is hopeless. Yes, these are small town television stations, mediocre to the core.

Of the two daily newspapers, what can one say? Every educated citizen has at least heard of, say, the Miami Herald, or the Atlanta Constitution, or the Charlotte Observer, but I challenge anyone outside South Carolina to recall the names of the "major" Columbia dailies. They are utterly undistinguished, laboriously reflecting the rightwing Fundamentalism that dominates the thought of the ruling merchant boobosie in Columbia.

Speak to any rich and famous American from any part of the country, and if he's heard of Columbia at all, he is likely to say, "Yes, I remember it. I passed through Fort Jackson years ago." But this is all he will say. He won't sing Columbia's praises. More likely, he'll say, "It's not my kind of town."

Why has Columbia failed to develop into a wealthy, sophisticated and prestigious metropolis of which South Carolinians could be proud? Why does South Carolina lack any large city, and thus any cultural center? Study first the economic foundations of cities: Formation of a city results in what are known as economies of agglomeration. In short, goods can be produced more cheaply when they are produced close to a source of ready labor and close to other firms that supply that supply raw materials. They can be marketed more cheaply when they are produced near a large market, that is, near a large concentration of people. For instance, no matter what you read in the local newspapers about New York City, that city will remain crucial to major industries and major mass media outlets simply because it is the largest market in the world.

As firms agglomerate into one centralized spot, i.e. the city, they also reap the rewards of specialization. Suppose, for example, you wish to establish a firm that manufactures greases for use on industrial machines. Unless there are ten or twenty industries which would be potential customers in a city, you'd be foolish to locate there, even given modern transportation. On the other hand, a large city offers support for all sorts of esoterica. That is why you can get any thing you want in a large city, and why in a town like Columbia you have to search long and hard for a particular pipe tobacco or a certain vintage wine.

Columbia has always been a merchandising center, and has failed to develop the accoutrments of a large city, I submit, chiefly because its entrepreneurs have been too timid or stupid. They have failed to invest accumulated capital here, and have failed to innovate. Instead, they've too often adopted an arid Southern negativism, a phlegmatic slowness of mind that inhibits progress.

Worse than that, the established firms in Columbia and the state, many of them, are corrupt beyond reason. Some of the largest are private corporations that don't even keep books (so no one can find out what's been going on). They exist within a "good 'ole boy" network not so different from the Mafia in its style. Competence and quality are their anathemas.

And if bright young South Carolinians no longer leave the state for New York, still they leave it for Atlanta, or Florida, or Houston. This is no place for the ambitious. I call myself a case in point. When I finish my Ph.D. (in economics) and add that to my six years of journalism experience and sundry other credentials, there's no newspaper in the state that could pay me the salary I'll require, and none of sufficient quality that I'd think of working for it. Thus I'm forced to depart to other climes. And there are not a few like me. Until Columbia, and South Carolina, grows up, this is the way it will be. One wonders if the state will ever transcend its own mediocrity. ■

Stick to the facts

Dear Sirs:

Your Mr. Ed Meadows apparently needs to do some investigative reporting of his own. In the Aug. 27 issue of Osceola, Mr. Meadows makes the unqualified and somewhat immodest statement that "if there's any investigative reporting done in this state, it's done by this magazine, or by the Charlotte Observer."

Despite Mr. Meadows' railing against the Columbia newspapers, I have from time to time noted that both these papers do investigative reporting. I've also noticed that the Sun News of Myrtle Beach has done investigative reporting in the past. And I would be happy to show Mr. Meadows examples of the investigative reporting which The Georgetown Times has done.

Admittedly, these examples might not be up to Mr. Meadows' standards of investigative journalism. To wit: "Children are people, and more often than not, they are the nicest kind of people, yet unschooled in the treacheries practiced by adults. At their best they can be warm, trusting, open, loving idealistic people. And if they are bad, it is only because they haven't been offered the respect, understanding, affection and guidance they require."

Mr. Meadows' probing for the cause of South Carolina newspapers' shortcomings reveals that they are "run by a hierarchy of grandmothers who positively faint at any thought of controversy."

It is this sort of rather hostile and shallow analysis which makes one worry more about the quality of the media's critics than the quality of the media itself.

If Mr. Meadows is truly concerned about the quality of journalism in South Carolina, then I share his concern. But in writing his critique of investigative reporting, Meadows seems to be more guilty of that which he finds fault.

Sincerely,
Lawrence McConnell

The writer is publisher of the Georgetown Times.

Not fat

To the Editor:

While I agree with many of Mr. Ed Meadows' comments about "Fat in the budget" (July 30, 1976), I found it somewhat incredulous that he felt the Industrial Commission was one of several "unnecessary and anti-competitive boards."

I have always understood that the cardinal rule of journalistic criticism was full understanding of the facts. However, such is not the case in point.

The Industrial Commission was created by the Legislature to administer the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Prior to such enactment, injured employees had no remedy for lost time, death, medical expenses or permanent disability which resulted from an industrial injury. While there have been valid criticisms of the present system, the Industrial Commission is not a captive of industry or labor but serves relatively the entire business and labor community of the state.

The operating budget of the Industrial Commission represents less than one-half of the premium tax paid on workmen's compensation premiums.

I frankly fail to see how a state agency which serves virtually the entire population of the state is "unnecessary and anti-competitive" or how it "aids and abets various industries."

Yours very truly,

Sylvia...

Not is it to belittle her personal accomplishments. She has spoken publicly to groups, breaking the intricate compound called government into its easily understood elements. She is secretary of the National Clerks and Secretaries Association, and is seeking the vice presidency of that organization, hoping to become one of the first Southern women to hold the position.

She is a strong person, highly thought of by her peers and associates for the most part. Legislators and staff alike say she does an excellent job and has a fine working relationship with the state's lawmakers.

Her critics, when they choose to speak out, use such adjectives as ruthless and calculating. But rarely do they choose to discuss Sylvia Risher. "The fact is," says one staffer in declining to talk about the House clerk, "it could be my job."

That's the kind of power Sylvia Risher says she doesn't have.

To be sure, The Book gives her nothing more than administrative duties. She lords over a staff of 17 during the session, six in the off-season. She is charged with keeping the House Journal up to date and seeing that it is placed on the desks of each legislator every day. The Book is her responsibility. So is knowing what bill is where and when. She acts in an unofficial capacity as House parliamentarian, sitting on the right hand of the Speaker.

The Book tells Risher what she can do; not what she can't. Perhaps that is why her name surfaces when many unpublicized goings-on down on Gervais Street are mentioned. Like the absurd episode over a bathroom for female members of the House. Or the odd phone call during discussions of one of Gov. James B. Edwards' vetoes. And even the dirty little -- though still mysterious -- document that just popped up on the desks of House secretaries the Monday before the General Assembly reconvened in July.

Some of her critics will talk about former representative Travis Medlock's futile efforts to buy his desk when he left the State House. Or even the strange circumstances surrounding Mrs. Risher's involvement in the jailing of her former husband for not keeping his child-support payments up to date.

One doesn't have to talk about Mrs. Risher's involvement -- if any -- in these matters. Just like one doesn't have to believe that she had nothing to do with Rob Wood's transfer. Her name simply comes up, often without prodding. Perhaps it is just an illusion. Much like her power.

The fact is, Risher says, the administrative functioning of the House was what first lured her into a bid for the clerk's position against incumbent Inez Watson back in 1972. At the time, she was serving as administrative assistant to former House Speaker Sol Blatt of Barnwell. "He and I both were concerned with the fact that, in a lot of ways, we were still standing still as far as the administrative operation was concerned," she says.

Thus began the campaign against Inez Watson, who had been clerk since 1951. It was called a bitter campaign, complete with the usual charges that Blatt was twisting a few arms to get his aide of six years elected so he could maintain and "in" with the House leadership. The charges remain unproven, and Mrs. Risher denies that the election was as bitter as reported.

"I ran for an office," she says simply, "because I wanted to run for an office. It's an elected postition. I'm not really aware of that much bitterness. I think that was played up."

In any event, when it became apparent that the non-political Risher had secured enough commitments to defeat her opponent, Inez Watson dropped out of the running; Risher had won a major political battle. She has held the position since, and now talks as if her coming election is a foregone conclusion. Besides, she says, she knows of no concerted effort to unseat her, and if there was, "I believe I would be aware of it."

Rex Carter, Sylvia Risher and Sol Blatt at swearing-in ceremony

There are, however, rumblings that her support may be dwindling somewhat. "Any of the people down there could probably beat her if they elected to," one critic says.

Adds a legislator: "She has been getting written commitments from people who say they no longer feel bound."

Mrs. Risher takes all this in stride. "I have talked to the members that are there are are running again," she says. "I believe I have sufficient commitments."

And if performance of the duties outlined in The Book is the sole criterion for election, Risher's re-election hardly seems in doubt. Rex Carter's comments are typical of the praise heaped upon Risher by her supporters; so are Sylvia Risher's.

Says Carter: "She does a good job. As far as I know, she gets along very well with the House membership and leadership. Her position is not one of power; it is one of service. Her function is purely administrative. I have seen no indication that she tries to infringe upon her duties."

Says Risher: "I think I have been very effective as clerk of the House. I'm very more than anyone has ever realized. There's a great responsibility in seeing that the printing (of the journal and the legislative manual) is done, that everybody's happy, that the information is obtained for the members when they need it. I've prided myself that, as a woman, I think I've walked into it with very little friction. I'm aware that there are a few people that don't like me; I would like to hope that it's just a few, and I think it is. However, the rules of the House strictly govern what I do. I'm sworn in; I'm under oath. It naturally takes a strong person. I have to, at times, say yes or no to a member. These rules are their protection and my protection. So I don't know if a weak person could handle the job. It's going to have to be someone that could abide by the rules of the House, which is what I have done. I have never had a member question the fact that I don't go by the rules of the House."

Says a critic: "Rex Carter is up for re-election as speaker and doesn't want to muddy the water. Rex Carter is not on that firm of ground. Opposition to her is opposition to him."

Says another: "Lois Shealy (Risher's chief aide) and Harriett Parker run the desk. They know the ins and outs." Shealy herself says that publication of The Book, for the past few years, has been almost solely her responsibility. "Inez was very exacting," Shealy says of Risher's predecessor. "Sylvia's not exactly the same person as Inez. Now I just go ahead; Mrs. Risher doesn't interfere. We confer. We have to cooperate; it is necessary that we get along."

Unfortunatley, the rules by which Mrs. Risher plays the game have been questioned, not only by House staffers but also by lawmakers. Perhaps it is not so much that her ways have been scrutinized, but rather her interpretations of the rules by which she so devoutly swears. For example, there was that silly little incident a few years back that involved the ladies' bathroom.

The House had unanimously passed a resolution designating a specified location for a restroom for female House members. The bathroom never appeared in its specified location; one legislator says Risher had an office placed where it was to be. "She went over their (House members') heads," the legislator said, "and did it on her own."

Risher says she cannot recall the specifics of the incident. She does say, however, that the State House Committee never approved the action. But the House passed the resolution unanimously...

Then there was the odd phone call while the House was debating Edwards' veto of a portion of the appropriations bill that would have provided $4,500 pay increases for three members of the South Carolina Employment Security Commission.

This is the official story, offered by commission members and by which Risher stands: Rep. T. W. Edwards, D-Spartanburg, had been assigned to that section of the budget bill dealing with the pay increases. There was a proviso to the bill that would, in effect, have amended it to make the raises retroactive to July 1975 rather than July 1976. it caught Rep. Edwards off guard. He asked Mrs. Risher to call commission chairman Lem Harper to find out the commissioners' feelings on bringing the matter to debate; the commissioners wanted floor discussion adjourned, not desiring to make an issue of the proviso. Risher called Harper and held the line open until Rep. Edwards and Speaker Pro Tem Ramon Schwartz could speak to him. Apparently, at the time the phone call was made, debate was going on.

Rep. Norma Russell, R-Lexington, who does not carry Sylvia Risher's banner and makes no effort to hide it, has charged that the clerk waited until she spoke (four representatives preceded her in the discussion, she says) before telephoning Harper, so the commissioner could hear her objections only. Rep. Russell was so incensed that she took the matter to Carter.

"Mrs. Risher denied it," Rex Carter says now, "and I don't know of any validity in it."

And what about Travis Medlock, who says that to his knowledge, "I am the only legislator in the history of state government" to be denied the privilege of having his desk when he left the House in 1972.

Travis Medlock's wife wanted their children to have the desk at which he sat as a legislator. So, he says, he went to Risher, who told him it couldn't be done. Then he went to Carter, who told him to introduce a bill, which was subsequently killed by the House Ways and Means Committee. He was sent off packing to a division of the bureaucracy and ended up back with Sylvia Risher.

He says he offered to buy the desk at a price more than its value. "I know scores of legislators who have taken them," he says, "and I can't buy it. I can't understand it."

Travis Medlock described himself as being something of a legislative irritant. he didn't always agree with the old guard, who he now says might give him the desk if he dies "for my estate."

"That's what you get for not going along with the gang," Travis Medlock says.

Sylvia Risher vaguely recalls the incident. "At the time," she says, "we have no such provisions for such sales. A resolution giving away the desks was always needed."

Travis Medlock did as he was supposed to -- even got a Republican to introduce the measure -- and lost. In Sylvia Risher's words, that's the nature of the game.

But Travis Medlock might have made a small error back in 1972 when he was in the House. He voted for Inez Watson.

While The State was writing all the strange things about how Richland County Court Judge John Mason was handling his cases, it left out one rather significant matter.

Seems that Lovick Daniels, a Greenwood teacher, had been ordered by Judge Legare Bates to pay $24 per week child support to his first wife, from whom he was divorced in 1959. He apparently paid on time. At least until April 1968.

On April 18, 1968, Judge Mason's name began appearing in the newspapers in connection with the case. On the word of Daniels' first wife, Mason had him arrested three times from April to August for alleged non-payment of the child-support money; all three times, Daniels was jailed. In October 1968, Mason raised the child-support payments to $36 per week.

In February 1973, Daniels was again arrested when his wife said he was $300 (Daniels says it was $288) behind. Mason issued an arrested order for $310. A SLED agent appeared at Daniels' apartment, from which he was whisked, brought to Columbia and jailed. He was told that he could have a hearing in about three weeks. Being a teacher, Daniels could not afford to spend three weeks in the slammer. So he called his wife, who brought $310 to Columbia to be [illegible] was passed on to his first wife, still in the bag, he says. "Here's your money," Mason has been quoted as saying when giving the $310 to Lovick Daniels' first wife. The State never gave the name of that first wife.

It was Sylvia Risher.

And Sylvia Risher's attorney was Bobby Kneece, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, which has more than just a little influence in legal circles in this state.

So Lovick Daniels was having a bit of a rough time finding legal representation. Here he was fighting the clerk of the state House and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He sent confidential letters to attorneys virtually everywhere, discussing and backgrounding his case.

He readily admits not paying the bills, but says he had a good reason. One day, he says, Risher called him and said she was kicking their 16-year-old son out of the house. In addition to paying child support for the two children in Risher's custody, Daniels was supporting one of their children himself. That meant he still would have been making payments, he says, as well as supporting two of the children on his own. And Daniels' wife had just left him, though they were later reunited.

While Lovick Daniels cannot say that Risher's position had anything to do with the strange events, there is no question that is what he believes. He thinks that it is odd that a SLED agent should be dispatched from Columbia to Greenwood on such a case, although a spokesman for the department says support cases -- which he calls minor crimes -- are within the jurisdiction of the law agency.

He also thinks it is odd that Greenwood County never knew what happened to Lovic Daniels. He says he called the county sheriff to notify him of the arrest order issued by Mason, asking him to call Daniels when the order arrived. Apparently, it never did; Daniels says the sheriff was never notified. But SLED did arrive, and Lovick Daniels found himself in jail.

Which raises another legal question. A Columbia lawyer says that unless specified on the support order that a person can be jailed if he fails to make a certain number of payments in succession, the defendant's due process rights have been violated. Daniels says he is sure that there is no such provision in his support order.

Therefore, it would appear that Lovick Daniels was jailed illegally.

But what bothers him perhaps more than anything else is the fact that he was arrested solely on the word of Sylvia Risher. "The court had no other basis other than her word," he contends.

Maybe that says something about Sylvia Risher's power.

Ask Rep. Norma Russell about the document that mysteriously surfaced on the desks of House secretaries last July, about who might have been responsible, and she will say nothing, "because I could get sued."

Ask her if she thinks Sylvia Risher had anything to do with it, and she'll probably reply with a short, "No comment."

The fued between Rep. Russell and Risher, while remaining out of the public eye for the most part, is no secret to State House employees. Pages, secretaries, legislators and probably even the security guards are aware of it. Rep. Russell won't really open up on the matter ("If I were a man, I'd expose everything I know," she says. "But since I am a woman, it would sound like two women bickering." However, when she does discuss Risher, it is in sharp, concise and contemptuous terms.

"There are no differences between us, as long as she does her job, as clerk of the House, without discrimination. I don't bother with her. I would not want to be considered one of her associates. The majority of the membership are scared because of what she knows. She takes too much upon herself as an employe; and she is an employe. I have nothing to say to her except on legislative matters. I can't stand what she stands for."

Rep. Russell, a hardline consevative who was recently in the news for her struggle to hang on to her credentials in order to vote for Ronald Reagan at the Republican National Convention in Kansas City, also does not mask her desire to have someone other than Sylvia Risher sitting next to the Speaker. "I just think it would be in the best interests of the State House for someone else to be clerk," she says, adding that "I will openly say I would" support someone running against her.

> Rep. Norma Russell

It seems that Rep. Russell had been complaining quite a bit, on and off the House floor, about the hours being kept by legislative secretaries. "If we would adjourn on Wednesday at one," she says, "you could call an office back and find no one there." She is irritated that someone is not in each office nine to five year-round. "I highly resent it," she says.

She believes it was her position that fulltime employes should work full time that was the cause of that strange document of July 19.

From what she has discovered, five copies of the document were placed on the desk of each House secretary in the hope, she says, that they would be distributed. The gist of the document, which Rep. Russell says was Xeroxed in the State House on state machines at state expense, was a brutal attack on her character. "It was a rather vicious thing to do," she says. "I thought the document was in very poor taste."

In short, the document was a fictionalized entry into the House journal that included a discussion between Rep. Russell and a Rep. Pendergrass. Under discussion was a section of the appropriations bill dealing with the expenditure of state funds for special study committees. During the course of the conversation, Rep. Pendergrass refers to Rep. Russell as Ms. Ray (alluding to Elizabeth Ray, whose revelations about her sex life have led to the political demise of Ohio Rep. Wayne Hays) before correcting himself.

At issue, in the fictionalized account, is Rep. Russell's work with the Communist Activity Committee of the Senate in 1967, before her election:

Mrs. RUSSELL: "Mr. Pendergrass, my duties were to serve as secretary to Committee which consisted of keeping the minutes, answering the telephone and answering correspondence."

PENDERGRASS: "Mrs. Russell, by that I assume that you were experienced in typing and answering the phone."

Mrs. RUSSELL: "I was, Mr. Pendergrass."

Rep. PENDERGRASS: "Now Ms. Ray, excuse me, Mrs. Russell, is is true that you went all the way to Honolulu with this committee at taxpayer's expense, to look for communists, answer the telephone, type correspondence, or whatever else you might have done on this junket?"

Mrs. RUSSELL: That's right, Mr. Pendergrass, I did go to Honolulu with this committee."

Rep. PENDERGRASS: "At taxpayer's expense, Mrs. Russell?"

Mrs RUSSELL: "the committee paid my expenses."

Rep. PENDERGRASS: "Ms. Ray, I beg your pardon, Mrs. Russell..."

Mrs. RUSSELL: "Mr. Speaker, I resent the inference Mr. Pendergrass is making when he acts as if he has inadvertantly referred to me by another name..."

Rep. PENDERGRASS: "I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you it will not happen again, but there is such a close parallel (sic) between this issue and some of the happenings in Washington, that I probably got a little carried away with my questioning."

Reaction at the State House to the document was somewhat varied. "A lot of people came to me and apologized." On the other hand, others thought it was a parody; "a poke-fun kind of thing," one aide said. One legislative staffer said the old guard in the capitol was "titillated" by it.

Norma Russell wasn't at all amused. She talked to SLED agent in an unofficial capacity, though no conventional channel of investigation has been initiated. "There's not much I can do," she says. "If I could prove it, I would prosecute."

One State House employe said that the document was "a smear sheet; sort of a bribed threat," that said, in effect, if you do know something, "we can assassinate your character."

Sylvia Risher does not believe that state employes don't earn their money, as Rep. Russell has suggested over and over again. "I don't think anyone at the State House is overpaid," she says. (Risher makes just over $24,000 a year.)

Rep. Russell recalls a short conversation she and the clerk once had on the subject. "She once told me, 'Legislative employes are not considered the same as state employes.' I didn't like the smile on her face one bit."

Sylvia Risher says she was out of town when the document first turned up, and that she did not learn of it until returning. Rex Carter says, "I don't know what kind of person would circulate it. It doesn't sound like something Mrs. Risher would do."

In July, at Goat Island, the newly elected House member from Clarendon County, C. Alex Harvin III, was host of a gathering of all incoming freshman Democrats and those who face general-election opposition in November. Says Harvin, who faces no fall opposition: "I felt that it would be beneficial if we had a meeting of freshman Democrats. There are 36, and some of them have strong opposition (in November). Those of us who don't have opposition are going to help out."

Sylvia Risher attended that meeting. "As far as my part was concerned," she says, "it was a learning thing." She discussed the rules of the House with them, answering any questions that came up.

"It was just a gathering she could come to," Harvin says. "Her candidacy (for clerk) wasn't mentioned at the meeting. She asked for my support, but she did not ask for the support of the group."

Was there a solicitation of votes?

"No," Risher says. "Well, now, I might correct that. Anyone who is an elected official is always going to solicit votes. As far as my speech or my mostly questions and answers -- not necessarily speech -- were directed at trying to inform them. I probably, and yes, I did, speak with some members there, as I would speak with any Republicans. Of course, you have to get elected before..."

She did not finish the sentence.

Where does Sylvia Risher's power lie? Perhaps with the people she knows. Perhaps with what she knows about the people she knows. Perhaps it does come, as her critics charge, from within her. But there can be no mistaking it: Sylvia Risher does have an extraordinary amount of power in the State House. Maybe not in the conventional legislative sense that we use to judge elected officials. But it is there, somewhere.

Sylvia Risher's prestige -- and power -- is best illustrated by the comments of her detracters, or rather, the non-comments. One can only hear "I'd like to talk, but it would be my job" so many times before realizing that this woman has a great deal of pull under the gold dome on Gervais Street. She appears to have a noose around the collective necks of a bunch of people in the capitol. One false move, and she could signal the henchman -- whomever his legislative counterpart may be -- and the trap door would swing open, leaving the employe dangling in unemployment.

But Sylvia Risher continues to talk like the obedient, politically non-partisan clerk The Book says she should be. She maintains that she is not politically motivated or oriented and doesn't campaign for her position ("I've always believed that if you do a good job, you don't have to campaign for anything," she says. "I've had no complaints.")

The obvious area in which to examine a person would be within her own little realm. Ask a question of one of the women in the clerk's office. Most of them will be full of compliments. After all, one doesn't bite the hand that feeds her. But at least one will say, "I work here and want to continue working here."

Which, as much as anything else, places Sylvia Risher's prominence in perspective. Power that has never been tested has proven to be the most absolute form of power. And that says something.

ORIGINAL SUMMONS
RULE TO SHOW CAUSE
The State of South Carolina
County of Richland
IN THE COURT OF PROBATE
Edna J. Lawton, Administratrix of the Estate of Ed James, Petitioner against
Sarah B. James, Edna J. Lawton, Henry A. James, John T. James, and Dale L. Scott, Defendants
YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED to appear at the Court of Probate to be holden at the Richland County Court House, in the City of Columbia, South Carolina, on the 24th day of September, 1976, at 10 o'clock A.M. to show cause, if any you can, why so much of the real property of Ed James, deceased, should not be sold by me, and the proceeds thereof paid over to Edna J. Lawton, Administratrix of the Estate of Ed James, to be applied by her to the payment of the debts of Ed James.
To the Defendant above named:
YOU ARE HEREBY SUMMONED and required to answer the Petition in the above entitled proceeding, which has been filed in the office of Judge of Probate for said County, of which a copy is herewith served upon you, and to serve a copy of your answer to said Petition on the subscriber at his office at Columbia, within twenty days after the service hereof, exclusive of the day of such service; and if you fail to answer the said Petition within the time aforesaid, the petitioner in this action will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the said petition.

events & entertainment

CINEMA

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 788-0790

"The Devil's Eyes" and "Coffee." Two action sleazers with showtimes of 2:20, 6, and 9:40 for the former and 4:10 and 7:50 for the latter. Both are rated R.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"Hard to Get" plays in tandem with "It Happened in Hollywood." Shows are continuous from 1:15 p.m.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011

"Infra Man." Another addition to the recent Sci-Fi boomlet -- this one supposedly concentrating on special effects. PG. 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10, and 9.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"The Omen." Gregory Peck and Old Scratch bump heads in this well directed but basically banal tale about the birth of the anti-Christ. Nervy Lee Remick thinks she is its mother, but ferocious Billy Whitelaw plays the nanny who tries to keep little Harvey Stephens from harm. Somewhat gory. R. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Silent Movie." In which Mel Brooks, Marty Feldman, and Dom DeLuise try to sell greedy studio heads on the unlikely idea of a silent movie in 1976. Brooks' latest doesn't quite have the comic invention or the directorial finesse to turn the clock back fifty years, but some very funny stuff all the same, and Brooks playing Mel Funn, mugging incessantly, is almost irresisitably likable. With cameos by Anne Bancroft, Paul Newman, Liza Minelli, and Burt Reynolds. G. Call.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"Future World." New Sci-Fi tale about a mad scientist of the future trying to replace the world's leaders with more rational robots. Obviously a good idea, but this sequel to "Westworld" is reportedly a close tie with "Logan's Run" as the most garbageous of the new S-F exploiters. R. Shows at 12:30, 4:15, and 9:30 during the week; call about the weekend.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"Gus." It's Disney and brand new. About a mule playing to win for a college football team. Tim Conway, Don Knotts. G. 12, 2, 4, 6, and 9.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street 257-5212

"Squirm." No sex, violence, or profanity but it's got an R rating: thus this tawdry looking number about killer worms earns its place in the film history books. Undoubtedly to be avoided. Call for show times.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Murder By Death." Comedy by any means possible including a blind butler who bumps into doors, a tough guy Sam Spade detective who hangs around gay bars, and a demented host who looks and acts suspiciously like Truman Capote at a misconceived costume party. Can Neil Simon really have made his fortune off of this sort of inanity? G. Call.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Go For It." "Fast action sports" are touted as the subject of this one, but we've never heard of it. PG. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square Downtown, 254-6731

"Robin and Marian." Sean Connery and Audrey Hepburn recreating the Robin Hood legend. While there are moments of great beauty and poignancy, James Goldman's stagy, pretentious, sophomoric script ruins the picture. He traps the excellent Nicol Williamson in a bumbling, witless version of Little John and gives Robert Shaw as the Sheriff of Nottingham such lines as "he's a little bit in love with death." Still, you may want to go just for the ending, which is sheer cinematic poetry. PG. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1227 Main Street, 256-1950

"Tunnelvision." Television is such an obvious target that any spoof is bound to get some laughs, but this version of what the tube might be like in 1985 is about as crude and unfunny as a copy of Sick magazines. it tries to take up where "The Groove Tube" left off, however lacks the panache for scatological gags and so seems more like a leer than a smirk. With about two minutes of Chevy Chase despite the high billing -- the rest of the cast unknowns. R. Call for show times.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800

"Billy Jack." Poor Billy Jack just can't seem to get his head together: he calls for peace and love but springs into action like a storm trooper when nasty Southwestern townspeople threaten the harmless hippies of Dolores Taylor's Freedom School. Tom Laughlin's peculiarly schizoid polemics and impossibly naive filmmaking style were box office dynamite a few years ago, but surely the public is no longer in the mood for his sophistries and paper thin characters. Still, Tom keeps hoping: this re-re-re-release is a prelude to "Billy Jack Goes to Washington," a remake of the Capra classic with macho Billy in the James Stewart role. Call about times.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 254-7960

"Survive." A cheapy Mexican version of the plane-crash and cannibalism best seller -- cleaned up on the optical printer with English dialogue added. 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10, and 9.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea." Yukio Mishima's spare, poetic fable about a sailor who dooms himself by forsaking glory for love has been transformed into a slushy romance with little point or purpose.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-228

"The Great Scout and Cathouse Thursday" stays for another week. A refreshingly venal view of the old West as a land of confidence men, crooked politicians and prostitutes. While Richard Shapiro's script is fairly raunchy, it's redeemed by Don Taylor's directon, which has just the right degree of exaggeration, and a fine set of caricatures by Strother Martin, Lee Marvin, Robert Culp, Oliver Reed, and Elizabeth Ashley. R. 3, 5, 7, and 9 with the afternoon shows dropping during the week.
